Economic Impacts of Mining in Nevada—2014

Nevada’s mining industry recorded approximately $7.368 billion in total value of all mined commodities (excluding construction aggregates, sand, and gravel) in 2014, representing a 20% decrease from the $9.036 billion value in 2013. Nearly 91% of the value was driven by gold and silver, which contributed just over $6.5 billion, based on the actual gross proceeds reported to the Nevada Department of Taxation. According to Kitco Metals Inc. (www.kitco.com), the average prices for gold and silver in 2014 were $1,266.40 and $19.08 per troy ounce, respectively. The value from the production of construction aggregates, sand and gravel in 2014 was estimated to be in excess of $300M. Nevada led the nation in 2014 in the production of gold, barite, lithium compounds and magnesium compounds. Nevada produced a wide variety of other mineral and energy commodities such as clays, copper, diatomite, dolomite, geothermal energy, gypsum, lapidary and gem stones, limestone, molybdenite, oil, perlite, salt, silica sand, silver, and specialty aggregates.

Production Highlights

Nevada’s gold production was 4,940,540 troy ounces in 2014 compared to 5,436,430 troy ounces in 2013, a decrease of approximately 9%. According to the USGS, Nevada remains the nation’s top gold producer with about 73% of the U.S. total. Silver production increased 26% to 10,933,774 troy ounces in 2014 from 8,668,596 troy ounces in 2013. Copper production decreased slightly to 132,616,318 pounds in 2014 compared to 137,714,765 pounds in 2013. Molybdenite production decreased significantly to 741,717 pounds in 2014 compared to 1,384,649 pounds in 2012. Barite production decreased slightly to 807,597 tons shipped in 2014 compared to 811,334 tons shipped in 2013. Gypsum production increased significantly to 2,803,848 tons in 2014 compared to 1,834,297 tons in 2013.

Employment

According to the Nevada Department of Employment, Training, and Rehabilitation, the Nevada mining industry employed an average of 14,413 employees in 2014. The average pay for mineral industry employees during this time was $88,634 per year, the highest average of any employment sector in the state. Mining employment has remained an important factor in Nevada.

Permitting and Reclamation

Before mining can take place, plans of operation must be submitted and permits must be obtained from federal and state agencies to ensure that resources such as wildlife, air, and water are protected. Nevada and federal laws and regulations require that lands disturbed by mining activities must be rehabilitated so they can be used for other activities once mining is completed. This process, called reclamation, returns mined areas to other productive uses such as livestock grazing, wildlife habitat, or other industrial applications. To ensure that reclamation is done, mine operators are required to post reclamation bonds that are held by government agencies. The bonds are released only after the mined area is stabilized and the reclamation goals have been met. According to the Nevada Division of Environmental Protection, approximately $2.49 billion in reclamation bonds and other financial assurance are currently posted. Mine operators are proud of their efforts and are constantly seeking ways to enhance their reclamation technology.

Gold Reserves

Gold reserves are defined as that portion of a gold ore deposit known to be economically feasible for extraction. The amount of reserves is always in a state of flux, due to some reserves being lost to production, additions of new reserves through new discoveries, and changing economic conditions. The price of gold and the cost of production are the main factors in determining whether a reserve is really a reserve or just a sub-economic resource. Extensive gold resources, not currently economic, are known to exist at or near many mining operations in Nevada. An increase in the gold price with all else being equal would mean many companies would be able to reclassify their resources into a reserve category. An increase in the cost of regulatory compliance has the same effect as a lowering of the gold price, thus increasingly complex and expensive regulations can reduce reserves. The publically reported reserves, at 2014 year end, were in excess of 73 million ounces of gold, and assuming similar economic conditions, are sufficient to sustain gold production near current levels in Nevada for about 12–15 years.

Exploration

Exploration for new deposits, particularly gold, is an ongoing effort by both the operating companies and many others who do not operate mines in the state. Exploration geologists, drillers, assayers, and others who support exploration activities represent a significant positive economic impact, particularly in Nevada's rural areas. Exploration activity and funding, like gold reserves, are closely tied to economic conditions and commodity prices. The amount of exploration activity in 2014 decreased from 2013, largely due to declining gold prices, which ranged from a high of $1,693.75 in 2013 to a low of $1,142.00 in 2014.

Minerals Other Than Gold and Silver

Minerals other than gold and silver are also important to Nevada's economy. Copper ranked second behind gold in terms of value in 2014. Industrial minerals such as barite, diatomite, dolomite, gypsum, limestone, lithium compounds, magnesite, molybdenite, perlite, salt, and specialty clays are also produced in Nevada.

Economic activity from oil and gas exploration and production is relatively minor when compared to mining, but are locally important to the economy of east-central Nevada. In oil field terms, Nevada is considered a frontier state, meaning its potential is yet to be realized. Interest is growing in some new unconventional targets and exploration activity increased in 2014. Oil production in 2014 was 316,426 barrels (42 gallons per barrel), with 311,910 barrels sold worth approximately $26.9 million.

Nevada is rich in geothermal resources and is second only to California in the production of geothermal energy. For 2014, Nevada had 22 plants at 16 fields that sold approximately 2.7 million megawatt hours of electricity worth approximately $204 million. According to the U.S. Energy Information Association, this is enough to power about 244,000 Nevada residential homes for a year. Geothermal heat is also used for a variety of commercial, domestic and public applications in Nevada. Schools in Elko County, a casino in Washoe County and homes in Lincoln and Washoe counties are examples of public and private facilities using this renewable energy resource.

Conclusion

Nevada's mineral industry continued to be a major economic force in the state with a total value of over $7 billion in 2014. Given a stable price and regulatory environment this situation should continue for many years to come. Nevada is a major natural resource producer and has significant mineral and energy resources that can provide strong economic development into the future.
